

Understanding Mental Health Through Indigenous Eyes

November 22, 2019 ♦ 9:00 AM – 4:30 PM ♦ 1900 Embarcadero Cove, Ste 101
Brooklyn Basin Room, Oakland, CA 94606

Patricia St. Onge is the founder and a Partner at Seven Generations Consulting and Coaching, where all of the work is culturally based. Deeply rooted in the concept of Seven Generations, recognizing the impact of the decisions we're making now will last for seven generations. Patricia is adjunct faculty at Mills College in Oakland, California and Pacific School of Religion in Berkeley, California. She serves on the Board of Directors for the Highland Research and Education Center in Tennessee.

This training will provide an overview of the values and cultural elements necessary to provide culturally relevant services to Native American communities and individuals.

This training will help participants address some of the common misconceptions about culture, and take a close look at how personal and organizational culture can drive our interactions with beneficiaries, and impact their treatment outcomes.

By the end of this training, participants will have increased their capacity to:

1. List at least three causes for under-representation and misdiagnosis of Native Americans in Behavioral Health
2. Name at least three barriers to success in working with Native Americans
3. Describe at least 5 elements of 'deep culture' that are distinct to Indigenous communities that impact their understanding and perceptions of behavioral health
4. Identify at least 2 additional resource (curriculum, partners, etc.) that can serve as resources
5. Assess one's own cultural perspective and capacity to provide culturally informed treatment
